HIV positive women in Kenya can receive medical advice via text message.

- In July, the Kenya AIDS Control Project began sending a test group of nearly 100 HIV positive pregnant women messages to help guide them through a safe pregnancy.
- The messages include reminders of weekly prenatal visits, medication reminders and diet recommendations.
- The program, which is expected to continue through 2013, may begin using voice messages to further increase access to medical advice.
